

What is work experience?

Work experience is an unpaid, short term, work placement.

It involves shadowing another person and learning about the job they do.

Why do we do it?

Competitive edge — Most employers view work experience as essential. Lack of experience is the number one reason employers turn young job applicants away

Work Experience placements are a good way for young people to gain an insight into working life and an insight into the types of roles typically available. They also give you some great experiences which you can then talk about in future applications and interviews.

Employers look for work experience when it comes to applying for jobs; having as much relevant work experience to the area you hope to enter makes you a better candidate for us.
